Card Manipulations No. 2

By Jean Hugard

CIGAM FTP 2002
PDF version by TARKO The GREAT

Contents

The Double Lift
The Novel Reverse Discovery
Invisible Transit
The Hand to Hand Palm Change
The Homing Belles
A Baffling Spell

COLOR CHANGES:

The Hinge Change
The Book Change
A Spectator Does It
In Reverse
Patter Suggestions

CARDS FROM THE AIR:

The Best Front Hand Production (Single Cards)
Second Method

THE ARM SPREAD FLOURISHES:

The Spread and Turn-Over Variations
The Glide
The Back Arm Reverse
The Upright Spread
The Elbow Catch
The Turn-Over and Right Hand Catch
The Back Arm Catch
Vanish of Pack
The Half Turn-Over and Catch
The One Hand Catch
The Hat Catch
A Routine for Arm Spreads
The Double Lift

No technical description of this sleight, which has come into such great favor of late, has appeared in print, so far as I know. Properly done it is one of the most useful weapons in existence for the card magician. But it must be done correctly, and to clear the way towards an understanding of the right method it may be well to describe the manner in which it is only too often executed, otherwise murdered.

How often do we see a performer fumble with the top-cards finally taking hold of two, holding them as if they were made of gold and a crook nearby ready to grab them from him, turn them over on the pack, then face down again, all the while gripping them with all his might, and then push one card with his thumb and put it in the pack.

Apart from the fact that in the action of taking the cards the performer appeared to be afraid of something, his method of pushing off the single card was entirely different from the way the two cards, supposed to be one only, were taken.

This is all wrong. If you wish to take two cards as one, and have your audience really believe there is one card only, then your actions must be the same as when you take one card. The following method fills these requirements.

While you are talking, and looking at your audience, square the deck with your right hand, and, in so doing, lift the inner ends of the two top cards with the ball of the right thumb, pull them a little to the right, as in Fig. 1, and leave them in that position.

Now, when you call attention to the top card, you bring the tip of the left thumb against the middle of the side of the two cards and push them out, as one card, over the side of the pack. Take them from the right hand, face down, and place them in the pack, the same way you took them out. You hold the left fingers so that the cards is received between the thumb and the first joints of the second and third fingers on the other hand, and the tip of the forefinger rests against the outer end. In this way the two cards are squared perfectly and may be shown freely. (Fig. 2).

Again you take the card(s) by the lower outer corner, between the tips of the right thumb and forefinger, the thumb tip covering the lower index, and turn it (them) face down on the deck. Place the card(s) so that it (they) coincide exactly with the top end of the deck, but do not release the grip of the thumb and finger. With a slight upward push of the thumb tip on the face of the lower card, release it and draw the top card away to the right.

Although it has taken some time to explain the action it must be understood that the actual movement takes a second only, and there must be no hesitation. The card is turned and at once drawn off the pack smoothly, the lower card being left squarely on the top.

In most cases in which this sleight is used the changed card is immediately inserted in the pack. The action just described brings the card over the side of the pack, with its back to the audience, so that the insertion in the pack follows quite naturally.

Sometimes, however, it is necessary to place the changed card on the table, or face down on the hand of a spectator. To do this, instead of drawing the top card off to the right, as soon as the lower card is released on the top of the pack, you draw the left hand away, the right hand remaining stationary for a moment, then you put the card in the position required.

One very important point should be borne in mind and that is—whenever you have occasion to turn over the top card to show it to the audience, do it in exactly the same way as when you take two cards as one card.

The perfect way to do this sleight is to push off two cards as one without first separating them from the other cards with the thumb. This is very difficult, but Mr. Dai Vernon, the famous card expert, not only does it, but is able to push off two, three or four cards, as one, at will. By this means he apparently places the top card in the middle of the deck three times in quick succession, each time showing it has returned to the top. In his hands this is one of the most amazing feats possible with cards.

Although this sleight, the double lift, has come into common use in recent years, it is interesting to note that the first mention of it, that I have been able to discover, is in a French book, "Nouvelle Magie Blanche Devoilé" ("New White Magic Revealed"), published in 1853. It appears therein as the first trick with cards, two cards being shown as one, then replaced on the top of the pack, the top card being placed in the middle of the deck and then shown as having returned to the top. The author calls it "The Invisible Pass." He claims several tricks that he describes as being his inventions.
A Novel Reverse Discovery

Effect:--A card having been chosen and returned to the pack, you allow the spectator to shuffle the cards and he then locates his card himself in a surprising way.

Method:--A card having been freely chosen, noted, returned to the pack and the pack shuffled, you have secretly brought the card to the top by whatever method you use. You palm the card in your right hand and turn the next one face up to prove that you have not brought the chosen card to the top. Call particular attention to the one turned over and let it be plainly seen that it is a single card, without actually asserting the fact; you may let it drop and pick it up, for instance, then turn it face down again on the top of the deck.

Bring your right hand squarely over the deck, replacing the palmed card on top, and at once turn the pack over to show the bottom card, and spread three or four cards to show it is not near the bottom either.

Turn the cards face down and, while you expatiate on the fact that the chosen card can only be found by having it named and then picked out from the others by running through the whole deck, you get ready for the double lift by separating the two top cards from the rest and pushing them a little off the side of the deck. "However," you say, "there is what we call Fate, Luck, or, if you prefer it, Chance. I have found it a very curious thing that whenever the ----- of ---- (you make the double lift and name the face card) is on top of the pack my luck is in. Let's try the experiment. First, will you shuffle the cards?"

You hand the deck to a spectator but you retain the double card in your right hand, face up. Receive the shuffled pack face down on your left hand. Request the spectator to lift up a portion of the deck at the outer end, just a little way, and you insert the double card, face up, at that point. You push it in lengthways until only about an inch of it protrudes, then with the tips of your second and third fingers push the lower card flush with the rest of the cards. The moment you have done this turn the card in the right fingers around to the side of the pack so that its ends protrude on either side.

The position now is that this face up card is in the middle of the pack, in the location chosen by the spectator, its ends extend over the sides of the deck, and under it you have secretly placed the chosen card face up. You ask the spectator who chose the card, to take hold of one end of the deck, while you hold the other. You show that it is impossible to alter the position of the protruding card, unless it is withdrawn and again inserted.

You have the chosen card named and you ask the spectator to lift off the protruding card by its ends, together with all the cards above it. He himself thus reveals his card, face up on the lower portion of the pack, and you remind him that he chose the location, without any interference from you.
Invisible Transit

Effect: Two cards, taken at random, change places at command.

Method: You hand the deck to a spectator and ask him to shuffle the cards thoroughly. You take it back and, while squaring the cards, you separate the two top ones and push them a little sideways in readiness for the double lift. Remarking that you will use the top card, whatever it may be, you turn over two cards as one. Let us suppose that the card that shows is the ten of spades.

"That's a good card for the experiment," you say, as you turn it down and, apparently, lay it face down on the table, really you put down an indifferent card and the ten of spades remains on the top of the pack.

"Let us see what the next card is," you continue, as you square the deck and get ready for another double lift. Again you turn two cards as one, revealing, we will suppose, the six of diamonds. "Excellent. That card makes a fine contrast with the ten of spades. I'll put it over here." You turn the two cards down and, apparently, place the six of diamonds on the other side of the table, this time, of course, it is the ten of spades that you remove and the six of diamonds remains on the top of the pack.

"Remember," you say, "the six of diamonds here," you point to the card just placed down, "and the ten of spades here. I'll replace the ten in its original position on the top of the pack." You pick up the indifferent card first laid on the table, look at it, but be careful not to allow anyone else to get a glimpse of its face, and put it on the top of the pack.

It only remains for you now to order the cards to change places, then turn the two top cards as one, revealing the six of diamonds, and invite a spectator to turn over the card on the table, which proves to be the ten of spades. The feat is not only effective in itself, but will afford excellent practice in the use of the double lift.
The Hand to Hand Palm Change

This sleight, which was first described by Prof. Hoffman in "Modern Magic," was devised by Prof. Hellis and it is still the best and simplest method of exchanging one packet of cards for another. It appears to have been lost sight of by modern card workers although some very fine feats are possible by its use. The sleight is not at all difficult and I strongly recommend the reader to use it.

In your left hand you hold palmed, face inward, a packet of cards, A, which is to be changed for another packet, B. With your left side to the front, you take packet B in the same hand, holding its sides between the thumb and second and third fingers. As you bring the right hand over to take the packet B, you turn towards the right, palm it, and immediately seize packet A by its sides, carrying it away, slowly and openly. You hold the left hand open for a moment, palm to the front, allowing it to be seen empty, then drop it quietly to your side. Just before you take away packet A, which was palmed in the left hand, curl your left forefinger up under it and press upwards against the middle of the cards, so taking the bend out of them which was caused by their position in your left hand.

With your right hand you dispose of the exchanged packet A by placing it on the table, handing it to a spectator, or otherwise, as may be necessary for the trick in band.

The packet now palmed in your right hand is disposed of by adding it to the pack, if this is lying on your table. You simply cover the pack with your hand and draw it back to the edge of the table, so picking it up. If, however, the pack is not available, you await a favorable moment for placing the packet in your pocket under cover of a natural movement, as, for instance,
It has the same time getting rid of the palmed cards. You take the handkerchief out and thrust the handkerchief into your pocket, at the same time thus concealing the cards you hold palmed in your left hand. This will give you a perfect alibi for keeping the right-hand side of the handkerchief. You throw it over your left hand then inwards and it is the four palmed cards from the pack that fall. The four are towards the audience. You cover them with the right hand so that all can see it is empty. A moment later the spectator takes the pack from you and at once takes the four reversed cards to leave the table. If the reader distrusts his ability to make the change smoothly, he can only be blamed. Those that just previously were reversed in the deck.

You spread the pack with the faces of the cards towards you and at once take the four cards. The four is taken. You allow the spectator to replace his card and at once take the pack and shuffle it before.

He is ready to return the pack, take your right hand out of his left hand and at once take the four reversed cards to leave the table. If the reader distrusts his ability to make the change smoothly, he can only be blamed. Those that just previously were reversed in the deck.

You spread the pack with the faces of the cards towards you and at once take the four cards. The four is taken. You allow the spectator to replace his card and at once take the pack and shuffle it before.

He is ready to return the pack, take your right hand out of his left hand and at once take the four reversed cards to leave the table. If the reader distrusts his ability to make the change smoothly, he can only be blamed. Those that just previously were reversed in the deck.

You spread the pack with the faces of the cards towards you and at once take the four cards. The four is taken. You allow the spectator to replace his card and at once take the pack and shuffle it before.

He is ready to return the pack, take your right hand out of his left hand and at once take the four reversed cards to leave the table. If the reader distrusts his ability to make the change smoothly, he can only be blamed. Those that just previously were reversed in the deck.

You spread the pack with the faces of the cards towards you and at once take the four cards. The four is taken. You allow the spectator to replace his card and at once take the pack and shuffle it before.

He is ready to return the pack, take your right hand out of his left hand and at once take the four reversed cards to leave the table. If the reader distrusts his ability to make the change smoothly, he can only be blamed. Those that just previously were reversed in the deck.
A Baffling Spell

In this experiment a new and bewildering twist is given to the popular Spelling Bee Trick.

Effect:—A spectator takes a card at random from a shuffled pack and lays it aside face down. The deck is again shuffled by a spectator and he selects from it any card he pleases. This card is then turned over, the pack is shuffled and laid on the table. The first card selected is then turned over and, on spelling it in the letter for the first time, having taken a card from the top of the pack for each letter, the second chosen card is revealed on the last letter.

Method:—The puzzling part of the feat is that the performer does not know the identity of the first card selected until it is turned up, yet the trick is sure fire. The principle on which it rests is this: There are 27 cards in the pack which, with the addition of the word “of” are spelled with either eleven or twelve letters. If, therefore, it is so arranged that the first card is selected from the twenty-seven cards, it will not matter which one is selected and the performer has no need to know it is in the pack. By placing a card twelfth from the top it will appear on the last letter when a twelve letter card is spelled out and in case of an eleven letter card having been chosen, you have only to say as the card for the last letter is taken. “And the next card is yours,” and turn that card over.

The twenty-seven cards are the Ace, two, four, five, six, nine, ten, Jack and King of Hearts and Spades, and all the clubs except the Ace, two, six and ten. If you use this feat as an opener, you can quite logically study these cards on the top of the pack, thinking it is an easy matter to get them separated openly. You have only to divide the pack into two parts, so that the chosen card may lie in the middle portion of the deck. False shuffle several times and place the pack down. If you are experienced in the art, you can cause the spectator to cut out two parts, it is practically certain that he will make his cut near the middle. The chance that he cuts anywhere but among the twenty-seven cards, which occupy the middle portion of the pack, is so small that it is negligible. You instruct the spectator to take the twelve cards from the top of this packet of cards, from the top and lay it aside face down, without looking at it, or allowing anyone else to see what it is. You hand the pack to another spectator asking him to shuffle it, then without warning, and return the pack to you. Tell him that you will turn your back for a moment and he is to hold up his card for all to see. You say you do this because the feat which follows is so extraordinary you wish to avoid all possibility of him being suspected of having helped you in your demonstration.

You turn away and rapidly count off eleven cards from the top and hold the packet of eleven cards separate from the rest of the pack, then holding the division at the back, you have the pack shuffled, and make a false shuffle several times and place the pack down. If you have done this, as the pack stands, you have twenty-five unsuitable cards on the top followed by the twenty-seven cards from which a selection has to be made.

You run off, by an overhand shuffle, twelve or thirteen cards from the top, thus leaving a packet of seventy-two cards, shuffle the cards and return the pack to you. Tell him that you will turn your back for a moment and he is to hold up his card for all to see. You say you do this because the fact which follows is so extraordinary you wish to avoid all possibility of him being suspected of having helped you in your demonstration.

You turn away and rapidly count off eleven cards from the top and hold the packet of eleven cards separate from the rest of the pack, then holding the division at the back, you have the pack shuffled, and make a false shuffle several times and place the pack down. If you have done this, as the pack stands, you have twenty-five unsuitable cards on the top followed by the twenty-seven cards from which a selection has to be made.

You hand the pack to another spectator asking him to shuffle it, then without warning, and return the pack to you. Tell him that you will turn your back for a moment and he is to hold up his card for all to see. You say you do this because the feat which follows is so extraordinary you wish to avoid all possibility of him being suspected of having helped you in your demonstration.

You turn away and rapidly count off eleven cards from the top and hold the packet of eleven cards separate from the rest of the pack, then holding the division at the back, you have the pack shuffled, and make a false shuffle several times and place the pack down. If you have done this, as the pack stands, you have twenty-five unsuitable cards on the top followed by the twenty-seven cards from which a selection has to be made.

You hand the pack to another spectator asking him to shuffle it, then without warning, and return the pack to you. Tell him that you will turn your back for a moment and he is to hold up his card for all to see. You say you do this because the feat which follows is so extraordinary you wish to avoid all possibility of him being suspected of having helped you in your demonstration.

You turn away and rapidly count off eleven cards from the top and hold the packet of eleven cards separate from the rest of the pack, then holding the division at the back, you have the pack shuffled, and make a false shuffle several times and place the pack down. If you have done this, as the pack stands, you have twenty-five unsuitable cards on the top followed by the twenty-seven cards from which a selection has to be made.

You hand the pack to another spectator asking him to shuffle it, then without warning, and return the pack to you. Tell him that you will turn your back for a moment and he is to hold up his card for all to see. You say you do this because the feat which follows is so extraordinary you wish to avoid all possibility of him being suspected of having helped you in your demonstration.

You turn away and rapidly count off eleven cards from the top and hold the packet of eleven cards separate from the rest of the pack, then holding the division at the back, you have the pack shuffled, and make a false shuffle several times and place the pack down. If you have done this, as the pack stands, you have twenty-five unsuitable cards on the top followed by the twenty-seven cards from which a selection has to be made.

You hand the pack to another spectator asking him to shuffle it, then without warning, and return the pack to you. Tell him that you will turn your back for a moment and he is to hold up his card for all to see. You say you do this because the feat which follows is so extraordinary you wish to avoid all possibility of him being suspected of having helped you in your demonstration.

You turn away and rapidly count off eleven cards from the top and hold the packet of eleven cards separate from the rest of the pack, then holding the division at the back, you have the pack shuffled, and make a false shuffle several times and place the pack down. If you have done this, as the pack stands, you have twenty-five unsuitable cards on the top followed by the twenty-seven cards from which a selection has to be made.

You hand the pack to another spectator asking him to shuffle it, then without warning, and return the pack to you. Tell him that you will turn your back for a moment and he is to hold up his card for all to see. You say you do this because the feat which follows is so extraordinary you wish to avoid all possibility of him being suspected of having helped you in your demonstration.

You turn away and rapidly count off eleven cards from the top and hold the packet of eleven cards separate from the rest of the pack, then holding the division at the back, you have the pack shuffled, and make a false shuffle several times and place the pack down. If you have done this, as the pack stands, you have twenty-five unsuitable cards on the top followed by the twenty-seven cards from which a selection has to be made.

You hand the pack to another spectator asking him to shuffle it, then without warning, and return the pack to you. Tell him that you will turn your back for a moment and he is to hold up his card for all to see. You say you do this because the feat which follows is so extraordinary you wish to avoid all possibility of him being suspected of having helped you in your demonstration.

You turn away and rapidly count off eleven cards from the top and hold the packet of eleven cards separate from the rest of the pack, then holding the division at the back, you have the pack shuffled, and make a false shuffle several times and place the pack down. If you have done this, as the pack stands, you have twenty-five unsuitable cards on the top followed by the twenty-seven cards from which a selection has to be made.
Color Changes

The term color change is a misnomer since it is applied indifferently to any change of the face card, whether of color, suit or value. Erdnase in his book, "The Expert at the Card Table," uses the term "Transformations" for these moves, but the change was not adopted by the conjuring fraternity and so the designation "Color Change," as is also the case with "Back Palm," is now firmly fixed in magical parlance in spite of the fact that, strictly speaking, both are wrong.

The sleight is most effective when the strict interpretation is adhered to, that is, when the change is actually from one color to the other, black to red, or vice versa, and whenever the routine in use allows it, the cards should be so arranged that this will be the case. The value of the cards to be substituted should also be changed, a ten for an ace, or a picture card for a deuce and so on. However, in many cases the card which is to be used for the change is fixed by chance, and must be taken whether it is a marked contrast or not.

The Color Changes which follow have not, so far as I know, appeared in print. They will be found to be effective and not difficult to do.
No. 1. The Hinge Change

You hold the pack in the left hand with the first finger doubled back, the nail resting on the back of the rear card. (Fig. 1).

Bring the right hand up to the pack and take it between the tips of the thumb and first fingers, at its lower corners.

Pull back the lower side of the rear card with the tip of the left second finger, so that the card is gripped between the tips of the first and second fingers. (Fig. 2). Pull this card down by moving the left fingers backward slightly, until it just clears the pack at its lower side and at the right angles to it.

The outer side of the card is thus brought to a point near the tips of the right second and third fingers. Push its top outer corner between these two fingers at their top joints, far enough to hold it securely but not allowing it to protrude at the back of the hand. (Fig. 3 and 4).

Show your left hand empty and replace the pack in it, pushing it well into the fork of the thumb, and extending the left fingers flat in front of it.

With your right forefinger, extended, point to the face card, bending the second and third fingers a little inward, the back of the hand affording complete cover for the clipped card, which lies out horizontally from the hand.

Bring the right hand in front of the pack, laying the clipped card on the outstretched fingers of the left; the right fingers have, of course, been kept close together up to this point. Place the right middle finger against the outer side of the concealed card and then open the fingers widely, thus allowing the face card of the pack to be seen through the separated fingers.

Suddenly close the fingers of the left hand bringing up the concealed card with them, hinge like, against the face of the deck, and a moment later remove the right hand. The new card appears to simply materialize magically, as there does not appear to be any possible place of concealment for it. This is one of the very best of all the color changes and is well worth the little study required to master it.
No. 2. The Book Change

You hold the pack vertically on its side in the left hand, face card outward, the lower side resting on your outstretched fingers near their roots.

With the right forefinger and thumb grip the lower corners of the deck and carry forward about half the cards to the tips of the left fingers, at the same time allowing several cards to fall forward, face down, behind these cards on to the left fingers. (Fig. 1).

Take these cards with the tips of the thumb and forefinger, by their outer corners, holding them at right angles to, and hidden by, the packet already held by the same digits.

Bend your right hand a little inward toward the body, and call attention to the face card of the packet in the left hand, naming it. (Fig. 2). Replace the right hand in front of the left, again resting the hidden cards on the left fingers and, as you name the card at the face of this portion, you bring the right hand up a little. Under cover of this you close the left fingers, carrying the concealed cards up against the face card of the left hand packet, book fashion, at the same moment you turn the left hand over, bringing the backs of the cards to the front.

Rub the back of the left hand with the cards in your right, then slowly turn the left hand round and show that the change has taken place.
No. 3. A Spectator Does It

After showing several changes you assert that the feat is an easy one and that anyone can do it. You ask a spectator if he would like to try.

You say you will pick out an easy card to change and, running through the cards with their faces toward you, you pick out a low red card, say the three of hearts, with a high black card behind it, for instance, the ten of spades. You being them to the bottom of the pack, the three being the face card.

Call attention to this card, the three of hearts, holding the pack in the left hand, face outwards, thumb on one side and fingers on the other. Take off the two bottom cards, as one, with the right hand, show them to the audience, then replace them, still as one, of course, on the bottom of the pack, but well over the side, as in Fig. No. 1. They are held on the bottom by the pressure of the left thumb, the tips of the second and third fingers rest on the back of the ten of spades.

You ask the spectator to hold out his left hand, palm upward and, apparently you place the three of hearts down on it. To do this you turn your left hand over above his hand and, as you lower it to place the card down, you pull the three of hearts back under the pack with your left thumb, and, with the tips of the second and third fingers, push off the card above it, the ten of spades. (Fig. 2).

At once drop the pack on top of the card now on the spectator's hand. Make him grip the deck with his right hand and rub the face card with his left. Assure him in all seriousness, that if, at the same time he mentally commands the three of hearts to change, it will do so. Then let him turn the pack over and show the change that has taken place. Gently take possession of the pack before he has time to recover from the surprise.

By the "Take or Leave" method, or simply by artful suggestion, you can force the card to which the card is to be changed. This will enhance the effect of the trick.
No. 4. In Reverse

This is a novel idea. In order that you may follow the moves clearly it will be well to take a red card, say the seven of hearts, putting it on the face of the deck, and a black card, for example the ace of clubs, which you place under the seven.

You hold the pack in your left hand in the usual position for the color change and stand with your right side to the front. Take the face card off the pack, holding it at the outer end by the tips of the four fingers, pressed close together, and the tip of the thumb at the inner end. Keep the back of your right hand to the audience so that they cannot see any part of the card, but they do see the ace of clubs now on the face of the pack, and you call their particular attention to that card. (Fig. 1).

Now turn your right hand so that the seven of hearts can be seen by everyone and replace it on the ace.

Again take the seven of hearts in your right hand in the same way as before and once more call attention to the ace. Replace the seven on the ace, this time without turning your right hand to show it first, but as you do so, under cover of your right hand, push the ace a little off the side of the pack with the left thumb and carry it away in your right hand by means of the side slip (Fig. 2). Drop your right hand naturally and concentrate your attention on the face card, the seven of hearts.

You invite your audience to watch that card very closely, as you are about to show some curious manipulations with it. You bring your right hand over the seven of hearts and imitate exactly the act of taking it off as you did several times before; but really, you leave the palmed ace of clubs on the seven, and then hold your hand as if you held the seven of hearts between the tips of the thumb and fingers. The back of your hand is towards the spectators and, seeing the ace of clubs on the face of the deck, they are naturally satisfied that you have the seven of hearts in your right hand as before (Fig. 3).

Keep your eyes fixed on the imaginary card in your right hand, then suddenly say, "Watch the seven of hearts vanish." You make a tossing motion with your right hand, turning it palm to audience, at the same time making a half turn to the right, imitating the action of back palming a card.

Next turn the hand rapidly to show its back, open the fingers widely, then press them together and turn it to show the palm. In fact, you make all the regular moves which pertain to the back and front palm, and, having no card to conceal, you are able to do them cleanly, to say the least.

In the meantime your left hand has not been idle. You drop it to your side, push the face card, the ace of clubs, down against the side of your leg, hold it there for a moment with the tips of your fingers, while you pull the pack upwards, holding it in the fork of the thumb until the outer edge of the ace clears the pack, then slide the pack down under it, thus transferring the ace to the back of the deck. This will cause the seven of hearts to become the face card and you must, of course, be careful to hold the pack with its face towards your body, so that the spectators cannot get a glimpse of the seven of hearts.

In the course of your manipulations with the imaginary card you bring your right hand with its back to the audience, close the fingers, and turn the hand around. Pretend to crumple the card to pieces, then slowly open the fingers and show all parts of the hand. The card has vanished, as you promised it would.

"The fragments of the card are floating around," you say, "and I can reassemble them. Watch." You make a catch in the air and bring your right hand down on the face of the deck with a slap and, as you remove it the audience see the seven of hearts back again. You must be very careful to hold the deck with its back to the front until you make the slap.

The effect of this little comedy with cards can only be realized by actually working it before an audience. There is a minimum of sleight of hand in it but plenty of scope for acting.
No. 5. Some Patter Suggestions

The color change is most often used as a mere flourish but it can also be effectively employed as an introduction to a series of card tricks or as an interlude between set tricks. For instance, let us say you have the following cards on the top of the deck, Jack of Hearts, Queen of Hearts, Three of Diamonds, Ten of Clubs and Ace of Spades; the Jack being the top card and the others following it in the order given.

To illustrate the use to which playing cards can be put to add color to a story, you recite the following verse, changing the face card of the pack by varying color change sleights at the appropriate word:

The young man (J. H.) makes of Hearts (Q. H.) his trumps,
Then Diamonds (3 D.) he plays,
But when his dream romantic slumps,
Too oft to Clubs (10 C.) he strays,
With varying luck the game is played,
The final trick goes to a Spade (A. S.).

Here is another and more ambitious example of patter to be illustrated by the use of the color change:

Once upon a time a QUEEN'S HEART was WON by a KING. He had a large DIAMOND which cost lots of JACK. People at the wedding saw a great PAIR. One night, however, the KING played the DEUCE by coming home to the pal-ACE at THREE-SEVEN A. M. This made the QUEEN SICK, so she seized a CLUB from a TRAY and THREATENED to beat him up. Be-FOR E she could strike him the KING tried TRUMPS, handing her FOUR TENS, remarking, "Here, do some shopping with what I WON." So they lived happily ever after and no SPADES were needed.

It should be a pleasant diversion for the enthusiast to arrange the various moves whereby the change can be made to best advantage with the color changes he has mastered. The' four tens might be crimped and at the right time secretly pushed from the back into the right hand and then produced in a fan from the knee.
The following method of apparently catching cards from the air is the invention of an amateur magician of Wellington, N.Z. It is, I think, the best sleight for the purpose that has as yet been evolved in that the hand can be freely shown from all sides in the action. This is not possible with other methods.

You have about ten cards palmed in your right hand in the usual way. Bend the top joint of your second finger under the top edge of the palmed cards (Fig. 1), then as you make a catching motion in the air, stretching out your arm, you straighten the fingers sharply. This causes the packet to fly out from the palm into view at the finger tips. (Fig. 2) The cards are held securely and squarely together as one card, by the top joints of the first and third fingers on the face of the card, and of the second finger at the back.

The moment the card is produced at the finger tips you press your thumb tip on the back of the packet at the corner immediately behind the tip of the first finger, and bend the other three fingers into the palm. The impression to be made on the spectators is that of having caught a card at the tips of the finger and thumb.

You show the card(s), turning the hand to show the palm empty, then with the left hand take hold of the outer end of the packet and bend the cards sharply back into the right hand, where they are again palmed, with the exception of the front card, which is stripped off by the left thumb and fingers and held up to view. (Fig. 3).

The right hand drops naturally and you are ready to repeat the catching of a card; you continue the movements until your supply of cards is exhausted. During the action you have your right side to the front. Vary the point at which the card is caught as much as you can and always see the card in the air yourself before you catch it.
Front Hand Production. No. 2

As for this production the cards must be palmed with their faces inward, that is next to your palm.

With about a dozen cards palmed in this manner you bend the fingers inward until you are able to pull down the top end of the outermost card as in Fig. 1. Your arm is bent so that the hand is about six inches away from the body.

You release the card by straightening the thumb and the card will fly out from the rest, at the same moment you jerk your arm forward and catch the card by its inner end at the tips of the thumb and fingers. (Fig. 2). With practice it will be found that the cards can be caught at their extreme ends so that practically the whole card is in view at the finger tips. Success in this sleight is mainly a matter of timing the release of the card and the forward jerk of the arm.

The sleight can be done very rapidly and it is one of the few moves which gain in effect by being done quickly. Some performers beginning the action with about twenty cards palmed, catch a dozen or so at the finger tips singly, and then suddenly produce all the others fanned out. (Fig. 3). It is well to begin with not more than eight or ten cards.

This sleight can be used to good advantage in the production of the full pack as a preliminary to a series of flourishes. You have the rest of the pack in a clip on your hip, or in your lower vest pocket. After producing say, five or six cards, you turn a little more to the left, reach out with your right hand as far as possible and produce the last of the palmed cards in a fan. At the same moment with your left hand grip the rest of the pack from the clip or pocket, adding them to the cards already in your left hand.

Turn now to face the audience, place the cards just caught on top of the pack, and, as you do so, push a good load of cards from the back of the pack with your left forefinger into the right palm. Riffle the cards in the left hand and produce the palmed cards from the left knee fanned out to fullest extent. Add these cards to the others in your left hand and proceed to your flourishes such as The Arm Spreads....
The Arm Spreads

No. 1. The Spread and Turn-Over

This flourish is the basis of all the spreads which follow and should be mastered before the others are attempted. It is not difficult but, as with all good sleights, practice is necessary.

You hold the pack in the right hand in the position for springing the cards from hand to hand. (Fig. 1). Extend the left arm straight out, level with your shoulder, the palm of the hand being uppermost, and your right side to the front.

With the right hand spring the cards along the left arm from the finger tips to the elbow, the first card overlapping the tips of the fingers about an inch. (Fig. 2). Close the left fingers under the first card of the line and so cause all the cards to reverse in turn. The arm must be kept straight and rigid and the cards should be in a direct line. (Fig. 3).
Variations for Finishing
The Spread and Turn-Over

These are different finishes for The Spread and Turn-Over, explained previously.

a. Simply drop the left arm to the side, so that the cards fall cleanly into the left hand after the turn-over.

b. In reversing the cards, instead of allowing them to fall on the arm, they drop into the right hand, which is held a little below the left elbow. To make them drop in this fashion you must turn the left forearm slightly inward at the moment that the cards are turned over. They should drop very prettily like a cascade.

c. After the cards have been turned over and lie face up on the left arm, insert your right thumb under the cards nearest the elbow, turn it upward and then press it downward, towards the left wrist, thus causing all the cards to turn over again. Finish by dropping the left arm and catching the cards in the left hand as they slide down.
No. 2. The Glide

To execute this flourish you hold the deck between the right thumb and second finger at diagonally opposite corners. (Fig. 1). Spring the cards along the arm from the fingertips in the usual way, but with the faces outwards. (Fig. 2).

Then drop the left arm, at the same time moving it a little inward, causing the cards to slide down the arm into the left hand. This is one of the prettiest of the arm spreads.
No. 3. The Back Arm Reverse

You stand with your left side to the front. Spring the cards along the back of your left arm, starting at the knuckles of your hand, and bringing the last card to a point about two inches from your elbow. (Fig. 1).

Hold the left arm rigid and lower your whole body by bending your knees, then straighten up and when the arm reaches its former elevation drop it a little and quickly turn it over, bringing the palm upwards. (Fig. 2).

Catch the cards as they fall, on this side of the arm, which should be dropped slightly as the cards land. This helps to prevent the cards from being disarranged as they land on the arm.
No. 4. The Upright Spread

For this particular flourish, which has a surprising effect, you hold the pack upright in the light hand, face outwards. The thumb at the middle of one side, the fingers on the other side. (Fig. 1).

With your left arm outstretched, back of the hand to the front and held vertically, you place the pack against the left palm. Spring the cards along the inside of the arm. (Fig. 2).

Bend the left fingers and grip the first cards of the row tightly against the palm of your hand, and with the right fingers, at the opposite end of the line of cards and stretched out as far as possible, press the cards under them firmly against the side of your arm. As much as possible of the faces of the cards should show above the arm.
No. 5. The Elbow Catch

You spread the cards on the left arm as in No. 1, then you turn the whole line of cards over by bending the second and third fingers inward.

With a sharp upward jerk of the arm you cause the cards to slide back and downward, catching them in a bunch at the elbow by bending the forearm back quickly.

From this position you toss the pack upward by extending the forearm and jerking the arm upward. Catch the pack on the back of the hand.
No. 6. The Turn-Over and Right Hand Catch spread the cards on the left arm as in No. 1, and turn them over as described. Put your right hand at the elbow and, as the last card turns over, insert your thumb under it, the hand being palm outwards. (Fig. 1).

With the left arm make a slight upward motion, and then drop it to your side sharply. At the same moment you lunge forward with your right hand and catch the whole line of cards between the thumb and the fingers. (Fig. 2).

The fact that the cards overlap one another, and that the right thumb is then below the bottom card, makes it a comparatively easy feat to gather them all. This flourish may be effectively repeated by spreading the cards on the right arm and then catching them in the left hand.
No. 7. The Back Arm Catch

You stand facing the audience, the left forearm bent horizontally in front of the body. Spring the cards along the forearm from the tips of the fingers to the elbow.

Place your right hand to the rear of the last card near the elbow, inserting the first joints of the fingers under that card, the palm of the hand being to the front.

With the left arm make a short upward swing, then drop it sharply to your side, at the same moment sweep the right hand quickly outwards in a circular direction from left to right, and catch the cards in the action.
No. 8. Vanish of Pack

You proceed as in No. 7, catching the pack as described. Continue the movement of your right arm behind your back, and, turning your left side to the front, thrust the cards into the left armpit at the back, at once pressing the left arm to your side.

Turn to the front again and bring your right hand into view, as if still holding the cards in it, and make a tossing motion, simulating the action of throwing the cards into the air. Concentrate your gaze on the hand and then look up as if watching the cards disappear.

After a moment or two lift the left arm and let the cards fall into the right hand.
No. 9. The Half Turn-Over and Catch

To begin with you spring the cards on the left forearm as in No. 1, from the finger tips to the elbow. Bend the second and third fingers inward and turn the first cards over until the cards in the middle of the line are erect.

Place the right hand over the upright cards at the middle of the line, the back of the hand being upward and the fingers ready to close against the thumb.

Hold your left arm rigid and lower the whole body by bending your knees, then straighten up and when the arm reaches its former height, drop it and catch the cards between the thumb and fingers by their upper ends. It will be found that by this procedure, the cards remain in position in the air for just the moment necessary to make a successful catch.

The usual method of doing this flourish is to jerk the left arm upwards then drop it sharply to the side, the right hand making a quick lunge and catching the cards. The much better method described above was given to me and demonstrated by Mr. John Mulholland in whose hands it became the acme of ease and grace.
No. 10. The One Hand Catch

For this difficult flourish you stand facing the audience. Hold your right forearm, elbow bent, horizontally in front of the body. With the left hand spread the cards on the back of the right forearm, starting at the finger tips, the first few cards overlapping them to the front, and extending the line of cards for not more than twelve inches.

Turn to the left with a slight upward jerk of the arm leave the cards in the air, bring the right arm back and up sharply, and with a quick forward lunge catch the cards, the thumb being under them and the fingers on top.

An elaboration of the flourish is to divide the pack, spreading one-half on the right arm and the other half on the left. Both portions are then thrown into the air simultaneously and so caught. A brilliant effect that will require some practice.
No. 11. The Hat Catch

For this flourish you wear your hat, silk hat for preference.

Holding the cards in the usual way you spread them on the back of your left arm. (Fig. 1).

Grasp the brim of your hat with your right hand, then jerk the line of cards upwards by quickly raising your left arm, immediately afterwards dropping it to your side.

Swing the hat around in front of you with a circular motion and sweep the cards into it before they fall. (Fig. 2).

By having a bag fake in the hat it could be so fixed that the cards would fall to the bottom but would be prevented from falling out. After catching the cards in the hat, turn it crown up and shake it, but the cards do not fall. In the meantime you have had ample opportunity to secure another pack from a clip on your left hip. Turn the hat mouth upwards and produce this pack from the crown in a fan.

If a hat is worn for your entrance this would make a brilliant opening for a series of manipulations.
No. 12. The Double Spread

Divide the pack as nearly in half as possible and riffle shuffle the two portions together, letting the cards fall card for card from each packet alternately. Place this elongated pack face up across the palm of your left hand, holding it between the thumb and fingers of your right hand at the point of intersection of the two packets.

Squeeze the cards firmly between the right thumb and fingers bending them a little, then spring them along the forearm, nearly to the elbow. Turn the whole line over by bending the left fingers inward, exactly as in turning a single line of cards.

Insert the right thumb under the cards nearest the elbow as they turn, jerk the forearm sharply up, then drop it to your side, and catch the double line of cards in the right hand. The movements are practically the same as in the single line flourish.
A Routine for Arm Spreads

With a view to helping the reader to arrange a series of arm spreads and catches the following is taken from that classical work on Card Magic, "The Art of Magic." The manipulations that follow are those adopted by Mr. J. N. Hilliard, the editor.

a. Left arm spread, toss and catch.

b. Right arm spread, toss and catch.

c. Spread on right arm, catch in right hand.

d. Spread on right arm, toss and catch the line of cards on the opposite side of the arm.

e. Turn the line over, toss into the air and catch in the right hand.

The five movements should follow one another quickly, the time taken up being about twenty seconds.

The student should thoroughly master No. 1 Spread before attempting any of the other sleights. With this at his finger tips the rest of the flourishes will give him little trouble.

No. 10. The One Hand Catch

For this difficult flourish you stand facing the audience. Hold your right forearm, elbow bent, horizontally in front of the body. With the left hand spread the cards on the back of the right forearm, starting at the finger tips, the first few cards overlapping them to the front, and extending the line of cards for not more than twelve inches.

Turn to the left with a slight upward jerk of the arm leave the cards in the air, bring the right arm back and up sharply, and with a quick forward lunge catch the cards, the thumb being under them and the fingers on top.

An elaboration of the flourish is to divide the pack, spreading one-half on the right arm and the other half on the left. Both portions are then thrown into the air simultaneously and so caught. A brilliant effect that will require some practice.

End of Card Manipulations No. 2.